It is not uncommon for there to be some final fine-tuning of the agreement prior to signing. Agreements are then implemented.

In the completion phase, final details and formalitys needed to conclude the divorce, including preparing and signing agreements and other legal formalities, is addressed. Everyone's interests as best as achievable.

Stage 3 - Agreement and Completion. The Agreement Phase of Stage 3 has selecting one or more possible agreement scenarios that hold promise to best address the questions to be solved. Key Elements, and their goals, are defined and agreed, and the scenarios are developed. The scenarios are developed, and possibly modeled and reviewed until a solution is found.

The options are evaluated by the clients. The options are reviewed, and their impact on the legal and personal aspects of the agreement is determined. The key elements of the agreement will be covered and any concerns that might need to be addressed. Those key elements are then open prioritized. The key elements of an agreement will need to be covered and any concerns that might need to be addressed. Those key elements are then open prioritized. The key elements of an agreement will need to be covered and any concerns that might need to be addressed. Those key elements are then open prioritized. The key elements of an agreement will need to be covered and any concerns that might need to be addressed. Those key elements are then open prioritized.

Stage 2 - Key Elements. When needed, we move to the key elements stage. This stage has several distinct steps. First, to focus the discussions, we identify the key elements.

The goal of the information phase of Stage 2 is to ensure all will have an understanding of the financial, parenting, and legal information to effectively participate in the process. The process involves work by the clients to gather information and meet with all of the professionals. After meetings with the financial and legal specialists, a joint session will be held to discuss the depth and implications of the information so far. If it is necessary to do the necessary groundwork of this phase, we do so at Stage 2. The goal is to ensure all will have an understanding of the financial, parenting, and legal information to effectively participate in the process.

Stage 1 - Foundation and Information. The Foundation Phase of Stage 1 starts the collaborative law process. Initial foundational work is performed, including initial education about the process, signing the Participation Agreement, forming the professional team, and setting and sharing high and goals.